Navy Exchange Service Command is proud to expand its online shopping, myNavyExchange.com, privileges to all honorably discharged Veterans of the U.S. Military.

This highly anticipated change by the Department of Defense grants online exchange shopping privileges to our nation's brave Veterans. The change started on{span}NEX Extends Online Benefits to Veterans{/span} Nov.

"We are proud to support this new DoD policy and are honored to offer our NEX online privileges to our nation's deserving military Veterans. It is one small way to thank those who have served," said Rear Adm. Robert J. Bianchi (Ret), Navy Exchange Service Command's (NEXCOM) chief executive officer.

"The Navy Exchange gives back 100 percent of our profits to our Sailors and their families through contributions given to Navy Morale, Welfare and Recreation (MWR) for quality of life programs and NEX store infrastructure. Therefore, we look forward to expanding our customer base of online shoppers, which will in turn help grow our merchandise assortment and continue to strengthen our ability to provide dividends for base MWR programs."

Donnie, a Veteran and NEX patron recently said, "Great benefit! I was selected as a betatester as a disabled veteran ... the savings are great and all hassle free online."

NEXCOM is excited to extend this privilege to Veterans like Donnie and invite all U.S. Veterans to visit www. myNavyExchange.com to establish their authentication for this important benefit.

Additionally, NEXCOM encourages individuals to keep visiting the NEX website and Facebook page for additional details and announcements as they become available.

After completing his surgical residency in 1965, Dr. Norm Rich went on to commission in the Army and served as chief of surgery at the 2nd Mobile Army Surgical Hospital unit. He was one of only a few Army officers assigned to Vietnam at the time.

Dr. Norman Rich Named 'Icon in Surgery'

By Sarah Marshall USU External Affairs

The American College of Surgeons (ACS) recently named Dr. Norman M. Rich an "Icon in Surgery" in honor of his outstanding contributions to the fields of surgery and medicine. The vascular surgeon was recognized for this achievement during the ACS's annual Clinical Congress meeting in San Diego on Oct 24

Throughout his career, Rich, who is founding chair of the Uniformed Services University of the Health Sciences Department of Surgery, has made significant contributions to the field of vascular surgery. A retired Army colonel and a Leonard Heaton and David Packard Professor in the Surgery department at USU, Rich made a stamp not only on military medicine, but medicine at large, developing the Vietnam Vascular Registry in 1966 based on cases he had seen while serving in Vietnam, along with hundreds of other cases added by colleagues, and he has continued to maintain the registry for the last 50 years. The registry sought to document and analyze all blood vessel injuries in Vietnam, and to obtain long-term follow-up information about patients who sustained those injuries, which resulted in documenting more than 10,000 injuries from about 7,500 American casualties in Southeast Asia. This effort laid the foundation for many of today's modern military and civilian trauma registries.

Dr. Norman Rich, Leonard Heaton and David Packard Professor of Surgery at USU, was recently named an "Icon in Surgery" by the American College of Surgeons.

During Vietnam, patients who sustained a vascular injury were entered into the registry, originally housed at the former Walter Reed General Hospital. They were also assigned a consecutive number and given an identification card, making them aware of the registry's objectives and that they were a part of this clinical outcomes effort. Dr. Rich was also responsible for helping with the long-term follow-up care for these patients.

A variety of articles were later published from the trauma registry, outlining these injuries, and in 1978, the first edition of Vascular Trauma by Rich and Frank C. Spencer was published – a textbook providing additional reports from the registry, as well as reports from experiences during the Korean War. Two more editions have been published since, one in 2004 co-authored by Rich, Kenneth Mattox and Asher Hirshberg, and another in 2015, Rich's Vascular Trauma, co-edited by Dr. Todd Rasmussen and Nigel R.M. Tai, and sponsored by the Society for Vascular Surgery. Each textbook has continued to offer the latest information on the treatment and management of vascular injuries to include perspectives from several other renowned surgeons across the globe.

Rich, an Arizona native, knew from an early age that he wanted to become a doctor. He earned both his undergraduate degree and medical degree from Stanford University, graduating from Stanford's Medical School in 1960. After completing his surgical residency in 1965, he commissioned in the Army and became one of only a few Army officers assigned to Vietnam. He served as chief of surgery at the 2nd Mobile Army Surgical Hospital (MASH) unit assigned to the 1st Air Cavalry Division, which consisted of 500 helicopters and thousands of Soldiers. In 1966, he returned to Walter Reed and helped train general surgeons and vascular fellows who were heading to Vietnam. While there, he also conducted research

The Warrior Transition Brigade-National Capital Region hosted NBA Hoops for Troops Nov. 9. The event was a wheelchair basketball game played by service members and coached by former NBA player Adrian Dantley and WBNA player Tayler Hill.

"Although we all face challenges in life, these folks are about to show you what they can do and it's really truly amazing," said WTB-NCR Commander Col. Brian J. Harthorn. "All of these athletes will run you up and down the court."

Within a few minutes, the Warrior Transition Brigade-National Capital Region (WTB) team scored the first basket against the Ft. Belvoir team. They never let go of that lead during the annual NBA Hoops for Troops wheelchair game Nov. 9 at Naval Support Activity Bethesda's gym.

The final score was 41-29 with the WTB team, coached by WNBA player Tayler Hill, beating the Ft. Belvoir team, coached by retired NBA player Adrian Dantley.

Dantley, a Washington, D.C. native, said he played basketball on base before 9/11. This exhibition game was his first time back since, and as his first time seeing a wheelchair basketball game in person.

Unfortunately, his team was down by 10 points at half-team.

"They're giving up a lot of layups," he said. "You hear coaches talk in the NBA 'Don't give up layups,' My team is doing it. They got to take away some of those layups and make jump shots."

Team-WTB player Sgt. Ernesto Altamirano said it was a good experience to be coached by a WNBA player. He said Hill told them how to set up certain plays, pass the ball and pay attention when they threw the ball.

Altamirano said his team has improved.

"It was good, a lot of people got better than we were a couple of months ago," he said.

The exhibition game was part of Warrior Care Month and is one of a number of events the WTB is hosting in November.

NMCRS Fundraiser Moves to Nationals Park

From Navy Marine Corps Ball Committee

The Navy-Marine Corps Ball Committee will break with a long-standing tradition of holding a formal ball and instead celebrate the end of their fundraising year with a Gala at Nationals Park. "We're excited to be the first local military organization to break away from the formal ball format and offer a fun, more relaxed evening," says Suzanne Dana, wife of Lieutenant General Michael Dana, USMC, and Chairperson of this year's Ball Committee.

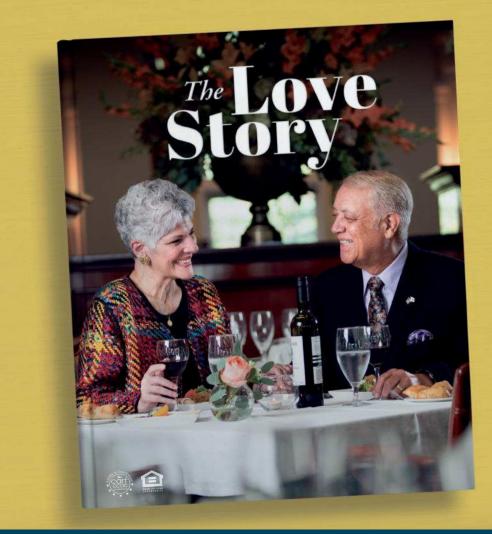

The Step Up to the Plate Gala will be held Saturday, March 17 and will feature all the highlights of the more traditional evening including a silent auction, opening ceremony and check presentation. All ticketholders will have access to a reception in the PNC Diamond Club, as well as ballpark tours, batting cages and mascot photo opportunities. The By Invitation Only reception for corporate sponsors will take place in the exclusive Delta Sky360 Club, located directly behind home plate. The main reception will be held in the Norfolk Southern Club, an open space spanning the ballpark from first to third base and featuring spectacular views of both the field and the Anacostia river. Additionally, limited private suites will be available for purchase.

Tickets go on sale December 1 at www.navymcball.org and the event is expected to sell out. "Some tickets have already been sold at pre-sale events plus we've had a very positive response from our corporate supporters," says Dana. "We expect that the more casual atmosphere and lower ticket prices will appeal to a lot of people."

The Navy-Marine Corps Ball Committee is a 501(c)(3) tax-exempt organization established in 1914 by military spouses to raise funds for the Navy-Marine Corps Relief Society. The annual event continues to celebrate and publicly express our gratitude for our corporate, organization, and individual donors and supporters. Funds raised by the Navy-Marine Corps Ball Committee help millions of Sailors, Marines and their families with financial assistance for emergency aid, Combat Casualty Assistance, Visiting Nurses and other vital support at home and abroad.

Six Sailors graduated from the year-long Clinical Psychology Intern Program at Walter Reed National Military Medical Center on Oct. 13.

During their internship at WRNMMC, the new military psychologists conducted psychological testing, performed consultations, specialty evaluations and research, among other duties. Their studies prepared them to work in traditional settings like hospitals and mental health clinics, as well as military-unique settings, such as deploying units or combat stress control teams, said WRNMMC leaders and program coordinators.

Navy Capt. (Dr.) Carrie Kennedy, director of the Deployment Health Clinical Center, served as guest speaker during the graduation. The DHCC is one of three centers that make up the Defense Centers of Excellence (DCoE) for Psychological Health and Traumatic Brain Injury. Kennedy has deployed to Guantanamo Bay, Cuba, in 2006 as chief of behavioral health services and then to Afghanistan with 1st Medical Battalion in 2010, where she was assigned to the Role III hospital on Camp Bastian. She also served as group psychologist of the Marine Corps Embassy Security Group, Quantico, Virginia, and as mental health department head at Naval Branch Health Clinic, Bahrain.

According to officials within the Military Health System, "Mental health, or psychological health, encompasses the well-being of mind, body and spirit, and contributes to overall health and resilience." The clinical psychology internship program helps prepare new military psychologists to understand and treat the behavioral health concerns affecting the functioning, readiness and optimal health of service members and their families, such as readjustment, depression, post-traumatic stress, anxiety, sleep disorders and substance misuse. This care contributes to an overall health of the force to enhance readiness, stated program officials.

Marines Celebrate Corps' 242nd Birthday at Walter Reed Bethesda

By Bernard S. Little WRNMMC Command Communications

Describing the U.S. Marines as the United States' "pit bulls" when needed, Marine Sgt. Maj. Gary D. Moran served as guest speaker at a cake-cutting ceremony Nov. 9 at Walter Reed Bethesda for the 242nd birthday of the U.S. Marine Corps.

"If you're at your home and a dangerous person is breaking in, do you want a terrier or that pit bull who's going to defend you and your home to the death?," Moran asked.

Serving as the Sergeant Major of Marine Forces Korea before coming to Walter Reed National Military Medical Center as a recovering service member, Moran said there's a reason Marines have been called "Shock Troops" and "Devil Dogs" during their history. "It's because we are the pit bulls of America. It has been said, "When our nation is least ready, the Marine Corps is most ready.

"Our Wounded Warrior Battalions are an essential part in ensuring our Marines and nation are ready for the next conflict, and there will be more conflicts," Moran continued. He said efforts, projects and programs assisting wounded warriors and their families in healing "are needed more than ever in this day and age."

In its 242 years, the U.S. Marine Corps has fought alongside its "sister and brother services" in nearly every conflict in U.S. history, Moran explained. "For the last 16 years, we have now been fighting the Global War on Terrorism. This has taken a great toll on Marines and other service members.

"Wounded Warrior Battalion-East [Walter Reed Detachment] has been taking care of Marines since early 2007," Moran added. "Myself and many other of my brothers and sisters [are] prime examples of what can happen when you take the time to heal us both mentally and physically, and prepare us for getting back to the operational forces to fight the battles that are needed throughout the world," he furthered.

"The professionals [at Walter Reed Bethesda] not only help heal our bodies, but they take the time to ensure that the wounds of the heart and mind are [treated] as well," Moran said. He added the health-care providers at Walter Reed Bethesda are exceptional not only because of their education, qualification and accreditation, but [also] because of their compassion, empathy "and belief that every Marine they touch [the providers] can possibly make a difference in getting that Marine [on the road to recovery] to a fulfilling life [within the military and otherwise]."

Navy Capt. (Dr.) John Rotruck, chief of staff for Walter Reed National Military Medical Center, also spoke at the ceremony. He said the Marines "are very near and dear" to his heart, having served as a general medical officer for the Marine Corps' 3rd Force Service Support Group in Okinawa, Japan, then as flight surgeon for Marine Medium Helicopter Squadron 266 at Marine Corps Air Station New River in Jacksonville, North Carolina followed by deployment with the 31st Marine Expeditionary Unit.

"It's fair to say that those first nine years after my internship, [serving] with so many outstanding Marines, were very formative to me as an officer and a leader," Rotruck continued. "I'm thankful for them to this day," he added. The Navy captain explained how those Marines instilled in him a focus for taking care of junior service members above all else. "That serves as a model for us [at Walter Reed Bethesda] for how we view our patients and families, [who are] the central focus of all of our efforts."

Rotruck furthered that he also came to appreciate how the preparedness and readiness of every component of the Marine Corps contribute to its success on the battlefield, which can also serve as a model that military medicine can follow "as an expeditionary medical force enabling the success of [deployed] war fighters by serving alongside of them."

In a message regarding the 242nd birthday of the U.S. Marine Corps, Commandant of the Marine Corps Gen. Robert B. Neller stated, "This Nov. 10 marks 242 years of warfighting excellence. At places like Trenton, Tripoli, Chapultepec, Belleau Wood, Guadalcanal, Chosin, Khe Sanh, Fallujah, Sangin, and so many others, Marines have fought with an inner spirit — a spirit that bonds us, bind us together as a cohesive team. It's that intangible spirit that has formed the foundation of our warfighting reputation for the past 242 years. Now it's our responsibility to ensure we honor and carry on that legacy. The American people expect a Corps of men and women who are committed, selfless, willing to sacrifice, who epitomize honor, courage, commitment, virtue, and character. We owe our Nation and our predecessors no less."

The ceremony concluded with the traditional cake cutting ceremony and the singing of the Marines' Hymn.

focusing on the repair of lower extremity veins, which had not been well-studied at the time. There, he also led the Vascular Fellowship Program, and later served as a vascular surgery consultant to the Army Surgeon General from 1970 to 1982.

Rich was appointed professor of surgery at USU in 1976, and the Founding Chairman of Surgery in 1977. In October 2002, then- USU president James A. ZImble announced the establishment of the Norman M. Rich Department of Surgery.

Rich has continued to make an impact in his field over the years, serving as president of six national/international surgical societies and governor to the American College of Surgeons. He has received many honorary appointments degrees from institutions worldwide, such as being named an honorary professor at the Third Military Medical University in the People's Republic of China, and receiving an honorary degree from the Mayab University in Mexico, and an honorary degree from the University of Lodz in Poland. He has received countless prestigious awards, both during his time in service and as a civilian. He has received a Lifetime Achievement Award from the Eastern Vascular Society, the DeBakey Award from the Michael E. DeBakey International Surgical Society, a Masters Medal from the Apothecaries of London, and a Founders Award from the American Venous Forum, to name a few. Some of his military awards include a Legion of Merit, the Bronze Star, the Meritorious Service Award, and several Vietnam Medals.

Recently, Rich also shared many of his Vietnam War-era medical items now on display at the National Museum of Health and Medicine in Silver Spring, including bullets and fragments from explosive devices that had been embedded in the limbs of service members, retrieved during surgery.

"I am privileged to have been able to contribute to the academic and clinical advancement of vascular surgery in helping provide the best care possible for those who have the misfortune to be injured on the battlefield or in civilian trauma," Rich said.

One of the many surgeons touched by Rich's education and mentorship, Navy Capt. (Dr.) Eric Elster, professor and chairman of USU's Department of Surgery, expressed his gratitude for Rich's invaluable support. He said that Rich has taught him the value of "reaching behind you and pulling other people forward ... the critical role of mentorship and being a selfless mentor in our profession."

Elster added that Rich typifies a selfless mentor – he truly values others and their success.
